Article reviewing 3 new therapies for those with autism. Here is the introduction statement:
"MRI studies have long shown that the autistic brain has a very small corpus collusum. The corpus collusum is responsible for cross-talk, or communication in the brain. Hence, the autistic brain is not wired to communicate within itself. Several new therapies seek to do just that."

An amazing lady in Austin, TX named Soma began the Halo Education Center because her son has autism. She discovered a way to help him communicate, called the Rapid Prompting Method. Tito was administered an educational evaluation and they discovered that he has an IQ of approximately 186. He has also published his poems.

Soma and Tito were featured on an HBO special. A mother in Iceland searched the world over to find a program that would help her reach her son (about 12 or 13). Soma worked with this child for about a week with her Rapid Prompting Method. This child communicated to Soma that he yearned to learn how to play the piano. He began to tear up, (he is nonverbal), and using the rapid prompting method (an alphabetic stencil type of device and a pencil in his hand to point) spelled out that he had had the music inside of him since he was little. Soma believes that you should always sit on the right side of the student, one-on-one is most effective, and she uses questioning as one of her tools to reach these incredible people. She also stated that stemming decreases thinking ability. She was quite amazing to watch. Go to www.halo-soma.org <<http://www.halo-soma.org>> for more information on Soma's program.
